

FAQ: GENERAL LAST CALL COMICS

Can I use a picture of one of your licensed characters on my website?

To be able to use a picture of one of our licensed characters and not worry about possible copyright infringement, you need to contact the company and for permission. If you want to use one of our creator owned characters, you must also ask for permission. If you don't secure written permission from the owner, you may be subject to legal action.

I want to write to my favorite comic book. Where do I send my letter?

There are several ways to do this.

First, check the letters column in the back of the book. Somewhere on there should be the e-mail address of the editor of the comic. That's where you should send it.

Second, if you don't want to open up your comic, send it to contact@lastcallcomics.com and we'll make sure it gets routed to the editor of the book.

Third, you can send it out to us here at:

I'm looking for contact information for an artist/writer/inker/etc. that used to work with Last Call Comics. Can you help?

I'm sorry but we can't give out personal information for any of the creators we have worked with or are currently working with. I'd recommend doing a search on the Internet because many of them have personal home pages with contact information.

I'm an aspiring artist. Can you recommend a school that will help me develop my skills?

Many colleges around the United States have great art programs that can help you develop your skills. The Savannah College of Art and Design offers great classes on sequential art. Another good school is the Joe Kubert School. The Kubert School is located in Dover, New Jersey, but also offers classes via mail. You can check them out at <http://www.kubertschool.edu/>
